Shed some light

A motion sensor may be a good investment for the inside or outside of a home. When the sensor detects motion, a light will come on, allowing you to see who is around your home. Precise placement and programming discourage “false alarms” caused by Lowcountry critters out for a moonlight stroll. When you’re away from the house for an extended period of time a light connected to a timer can be scheduled to turn off during the day and come on as the sun goes down. A wireless command plug-in lamp converter turns on lights and lamps or sounds on an alert when activated. A voice-commanding light switch plugs into any wall socket and can turn a lamp on or off with the sound of your voice. It can even control light settings. Make sure your entry door and back door are well lit, using mushroom lights to illuminate walkways and well lights which shine up on trees and brighten up foliage. A well-lit home is a safe home.

Camera surveillance

It may seem a bit extreme, but there’s no better way to see what’s going on in your yard than with a discretely placed camera. With prices coming down on basic home surveillance systems, some great models are even available at your local hardware store you can install yourself. Intercom systems can be an effective way to let that stranger outside know you’re watching.

Leave it to the professionals

If you do not want to set up your home yourself, getting a home security system installed by a local professional can be easy and convenient.

Home security systems are small, simple to use and effective. Systems come either hard-wired into the home, or with wireless technology for self-sufficiency. With only the touch of a few buttons, it will make you feel safe at home during the day or night.
