

news: EDITOR'S LETTER/ READERS' FORUMLETTERS

To have omitted Marva Collins from the Island's most Intriguing People was quixotic at least, ridiculous at most! This woman has to her credits: two offers from Presidents Reagan and Bush to be Secretary of Education, she was on 60 Minutes three times, a movie of her life, and an international sought after speaker. Her name is a household word, except with local recognition! What a sin of omission! – Patricia Hurley

Editor's note: While Ms. Collins certainly sounds fascinating, our Intriguing People of the Lowcountry section is driven largely by reader suggestion. It's never too early to nominate someone for next year!

I am writing to compliment you on your fine publication and to thank you for including a profile of me in your January 2004 issue. I was surprised when Frank Dunne, Jr. asked to interview me and was somewhat apprehensive during our meeting because I wasn't sure I was expressing myself clearly. However, Mr. Dunne is a skilled interviewer and obviously talented writer who really captured the essence of my feelings about Oldfield and the outdoors. He is a credit to your organization. – Dave Murray

Enjoyed "Intriguing People of the Lowcountry," however, you denote Brian and Gloria Carmines as restauranteurs; it should be restaurateurs – an idiosyncrasy of the English language thanks to French. – Fred Mosser

Editor's note: Merci, monsieur, but while the Oxford English Dictionary would agree with you, both the American Heritage and Merriam-Webster dictionaries list either one as acceptable. We'll be sure in future to brush up on our Français.

Many thanks for your excellent article on Cellular Angels in the December issue of Hilton Head Monthly and for including the CODA logo. The publicity will surely help us to reach more people who can donate their surplus phones. – Jack Wilson
